

Getting Started with Distributed Computing

Distributed systems allow multiple computers to coordinate and solve large computing problems efficiently. In a pipeline architecture, data moves sequentially through various processing stages.

Key Benefits

- High availability and fault tolerance.
- Horizontal scalability across worker nodes.
- Modularity and loose coupling of microservices.